The MIXING BOWL by ANN MEREDITH

The Last Days of Summer

We seem to have a sense of hurry-up-and-get-set-for winter in these last days of summer. Everything seems to pile up—late peaches to can or pickle—pear and apple butter to make—grape jelly—crabapple jelly and spiced crabs—and all the other odds and ends our latent cave-dweller instincts urge us to preserve against winter food shortage.

Let me suggest potting some herbaceous clumps of chives and parsley so that you will have fresh garnishings and seasonings for salads. A generous pot filled with good soil, occasionally doses of fertilizer plus a sunny window will keep you in green seasonings all winter.

For a sunny living room window why not get one of those attractive ivy balls, and have something green and growing in your living room all winter. Nearly every room has some window that does not open, and such a spot is ideal for these ivy balls. Ask for them the next time you are in a china-ware store.

TODAY'S RECIPE

BAKED RED SNAPPER With Shrimp Stuffing

One 3-pound red snapper
1 tall can of shrimp
1 1/2 cups breadcrumbs
1 dried onion
Small bunch parsley
1 egg, well beaten
Salt and pepper
1 small can tomatoes
1 minced clove garlic.
Butter and flour for thickening
Sauce

Clean and wash the fish carefully, wipe and rub inside and out with salt and pepper. Lay fish on some slices of bacon in a baking pan and fill it with stuffing made this way:

Prepare the shrimp always strip out the black vein in the shrimp) and mash with the crumbs and dried onion, frying all to a soft mass in some butter. Take from the fire and mix in the whipping cream, pour around the snapper and stuff the stuffing. Season it as highly as your family will permit.

In stuffing the fish set the pan so that the back of the fish is towards you, then with a spoon firmly press the stuffing into the fish and sew up or tie securely with twine. Lay some more slices of bacon over the fish and quickly sear in a hot oven.

While this is doing, heat the tomato, strain it and add a tiny bit of flour but lots of butter, and the minced clove of garlic, salt, pepper and cayenne, pour around the fish and use it to baste the fish while cooking. Reduce the heat and bake slowly for 1 1/2 hours.

This fish recipe will serve eight people. The cost is relatively small since red snapper is one of our cheap fish. It is a lean fish, so needs quite a bit of fat in its cooking.

The calories per portion will be around 460 each, mostly lean proteins.

ARTHUR FARWELL

By RUTH ANDREWS

Perhaps none of our contemporary American composers has done more to foster the growth and development of our own national music than has Arthur Farwell, who has been especially active in musical progress throughout this nation for more than 30 years.

Throughout his active and versatile life as a musician, composer, lecturer, writer, director of community projects and collector of folk songs, Farwell has put forth every effort to further the progress of many other American composers at the beginning of their careers, who have since risen to positions of prominence, undoubtedly due in no small degree to the aid Farwell was ever eager to bestow.

Especially have Farwell's activities been of value in his founding and support of the Wa-Wan Press, a unique organization devoted to bringing out the works of American composers, especially those finding native folk material.

Through the aid of Farwell and the Wa-Wan Press, the works of such composers as Henry F. Gilbert, Edgar Stillman Kelley and Harvey Worthington Loomis were first brought to the attention of a public always hesitant about innovations in art, and the utilization of the wealth of native folk music to be found on American soil has been facilitated.

In the last field that Farwell has done especially important pioneer work, realizing intuitively the value that lay in the native Indian folk themes, personally collecting and classifying them, and bringing them to the attention of American composers.

Farwell is a native of the Northern Middle West, born in St. Paul, Minn., in 1872. His musical education as a youth was limited to lessons in violin, in which he did not display any unusual talent.

With every intention of embarking upon the career of an electrical engineer, Farwell entered the Boston Institute of Technology at 17. While studying at this institution he first heard the famous Boston Symphony orchestra, and was enthralled by the beauty of the music.

PLAN "LA FIESTA" MUSIC

Special music will be an important feature of the colorful "La Fiesta de Los Angeles," the city's 150th birthday celebration, to open September 4 and continue through 10 days of festivity and merry-making. A music contest has been under way for some weeks past, for the purpose of securing official songs to be used during the event, written especially in its honor and to be characterized by the typical Spanish flavor and glamour of the early days.

The prize-winning compositions will be reproduced on phonograph records for national distribution and will also be popularized by radio broadcasts, prior to the opening of the sale event.

During the Fiesta, many of the musical instruments brought to California in the early days, including pianos, melodeons, violins, guitars and horns, will be among other interesting exhibits displayed.

Christine Sterling, overseer of the Avila Adobe in Olvera street, owns one of the first melodeons and the third piano brought to Los Angeles. Both of these instruments came by ship around the Horn. The piano was made in Germany and the melodeon in London.

A great many old Mexican and Spanish musical instruments will also be shown, together with an extensive collection of Indian tom-toms, flutes and horns.

Mary Carr Moore, well-known Los Angeles composer, and Neeta Marquis, equally well-known California poet and writer, are collaborating on the writing of a three-act opera, "Los Rubios," to be presented during the Fiesta. This work was commissioned by the Los Angeles city playground commission, in response to efforts put forth by the Los Angeles Society for the Advancement of American Music, an organization which has been active in the neighborhood city during recent months.

"Los Rubios" is founded on an early California setting and deals with the passing of the ranchos of the early days.

LOS ANGELES
To Conclude Bowl Series
The 10th series of "Summer symphonies under the stars" that have been given in Hollywood bowl throughout the summer months of July and August, will be concluded next week, the final concert of the eight weeks series being scheduled for presentation on Saturday evening, August 29.

Concerts will be conducted by Alfred Hertz during the final week of the series.

Hertz, former conductor of the San Francisco symphony orchestra through a period of 15 years, and a favorite with bowl patrons as well, is planning to feature the San Francisco municipal chorus at the bowl on the final program of the series, Saturday evening, August 29.

The famous chorus numbers 280 members. It will be brought to Los Angeles on its own special Southern Pacific train of 16 cars, Pullmans and diners.

Soloists scheduled to appear at the bowl during the final week of summer concerts include Quena Mario, noted Metropolitan Opera company

Coming under the influence of George W. Chadwick, celebrated New England composer, as well as that of Edward MacDowell, Farwell received some instruction in harmony, with the result that by the time he was ready to graduate from the institute in 1893 he had given up his early plans for a mechanical career, to worship instead at the shrine of music.

The six years that followed were spent by Farwell in intensive musical study. Until he was 25, he studied composition in Boston, then going to Germany and France to spend two years with world-famous masters. In Berlin Farwell studied with Humperdinck and Pfizner, the latter one of Germany's most important contemporary composers, while in Paris he profited by instruction from Guilmant, famous French organ authority.

In 1899, when Farwell was 27, he returned to America, almost at once receiving an appointment as lecturer on history of music at Cornell University. He devoted his spare moments to the study of Indian folk-music, a subject in which he was deeply interested.

Realizing that herein lay a wealth of thematic material awaiting only the inspiration of the writer, Farwell founded the Wa-Wan Press in 1901 at Newton Center, Massachusetts, especially for the purpose of bringing out music by American composers in which the native Indian themes were utilized.

In Farwell's own statement, given out at that time, the Wa-Wan Press aimed, "to promote by publication and public hearings, the most progressive, characteristic and serious works of American composers, known or unknown, and to present compositions based on the melodies and folk-lore of the American Indians."

By means of lecturing and writing, Farwell raised the money needed to finance this unique organization successfully, and during the eleven years he conducted it, worked untiringly to stimulate American interest in the wealth of native music so easily available to composers in this country. In 1912 the Wa-Wan Press was absorbed by the Schermer Music Company of New York City, and Farwell turned his attention to other musical activities.

BLAIR NILES,
Author of "Strange Brother"

Art Notes . . .

The Art Institute of Chicago is giving one-man shows during the summer months in the east wing of the institute in order to render a real service to young American artists, placing their creative work before the public. Le Lorraine Albright, who with his father and brother, also well known artists, spend much time in Laguna has been among the artists so honored.

Several years ago this young artist painted Miss Frances Milburn, a local girl, as a dancing figure. The picture is entitled "Midnight." The Art Digest says, "This picture created a sensation when shown in the 25th annual exhibition last season. The modeling of the young woman is remarkable. There is something peculiar and individual about the work which arrests the visitor at once. It is the strange color and meticulous technique."

Louis Danz has been invited to speak on art before the Galerie Beaux Arts in San Francisco next fall. It is reported. It came about through the recent visit of Beatrice Judd Ryan to Laguna and the story which Arthur Miller gave Mr. Danz after hearing his recent lecture here before the Laguna Beach Art association.

On account of the unusual demand for Mr. Brandt's work the exhibition at the Fern Burford Art Galleries at Laguna Beach will be extended until September first. Sixteen of his pictures have been sold to date.

The Art Digest of New York City is carrying a large picture of the Los Angeles Art Museum as it will look when completed. Now one-eighth the size according to design, it will eventually cover two entire city blocks. It holds the unique position of being owned and supported not by the municipality but by the county of Los Angeles with a population of about 2,200,000. "The art collection of the museum, under the new curator, H. M. Kurtzworth, are being assembled on a plan of practical inspirational value, rather than on the "Art for art's sake" formula of yesterday. It begins with the artists of today."

A spacious hall in the Seraglio palace in Istanbul is now open for the display of jewels worn by the sultans and their wives. Many of them are so rich in precious stones and so beautiful of design that they can be compared with the fabulous treasures described in the old Turkish fairy tales. There are watches covered with stones, a collection of prayer crowns made of diamonds, and many other priceless jewels.

"Art is a social thing. Impossible without the artist, it cannot flourish without the patron."

VIOLIN CONCERT

The presentation of a program of violin quartet numbers Friday evening by Marion Nau, Santa Ana; Ralph Greer, Fullerton; Simon Plas, Costa Mesa and Robert Townsend, Yorba Linda, all artist pupils of Elwood Bear, marked the opening of Elwood Bear Violin School, 208 South Sycamore street, and also marked the farewell appearance of Simon Plas as one of the members of this quartet.

Plas is leaving for Rochester, N. Y., in a few days. He has been accepted in the violin department of the Eastman School of Music, which, with Curtis Institute of Philadelphia, has the distinction of being the largest music school in this country.

The quartet played the repertoire performed at many concerts and musical entertainments throughout the country last season, and also played the more popular numbers which won them gratifying comment at the plays presented by the Santa Ana Community Players last winter.

The quartet will now be re-organized by Bear and it is expected that in short time the players will again be heard at musical events in the community.

BOOK REVIEWS

By MARY BURKE KING

The Passionate Pilgrim, by Mrs. Gertrude Marvin Williams, published by Coward-McCann.

"The Passionate Pilgrim" is the life of Annie Besant. Unflatteringly truthful to the events of her life it at times reaches such depths that one is ashamed to waste further time over the book, and then again it presents such an engendering of personality, such a puzzle of what might have been the accomplishments of this dynamic woman that as a study of events and psychology and frustrations and distorted talents and disharmonies, as to be worth any one's time.

At few places in all history could one find the irony presented by this author in the picture of the climax of Krishnamurti. For sixteen years Mrs. Besant had presided of him as the coming Messiah.

For three successive summers at the annual meetings at Ommen, Holland, he sat, beautiful and impelling, as she claimed to three thousand people that he was the great master. Then one summer he spoke. He warned Mrs. Besant not to come, said that it would be embarrassing to him. But Mrs. Besant went to that meeting too. He spoke and what he said was the antithesis of what Annie Besant had been practicing and maintaining in the Theosophical organization. She had built up elaborate ritual. Under her leadership there was an elaborate organization of thirty thousand people, all paying annual dues. Krishnamurti insisted on the fulfillment of rituals and forms. People must free themselves of badges and ceremonies, dogmas, regulations, "before their souls could find the peace which is the path of understanding." Mrs. Besant even dissolved the Order of the Star of which he was head.

"It was a dramatic gesture," says this author. "But such is his followers' devotion that many of them will undoubtedly continue their contributions with increased fervor. Besides which, he can afford to be somewhat reckless in money matters. Annie Besant's genius for publicity has laid in a million dollars."

Annie Besant had been proclaiming the coming of the World Teacher for many years. Now he had come and he had spoken. There was nothing for her to say. She had elevated him about herself. Whatever he said was right. For an example of the treachery of the mind, the life and activities of an imbrogeol of Annie Besant is unique. Probably her mind has been too agile at getting her out of difficulties; it had not been so she might have learned caution.

Dwarf's Blood by Edith Olivier. A serious charge has been brought against the author of this book, a charge concerned in many people. It is that the author has set up in her story for a character, and circumstances and nature are arranged for her soul-moving tragedy—and then the story was ended on a different note—a key of understanding of the two characters a father and his dwarf son who had been widely separated by divergences in character throughout the early years of the life of the boy.

The story is of Nicholas Roxerby and his son, Nicholas Roxerby, a dwarf. Bob, the younger son of one of England's nobles had been in love with a beautiful girl, and she with him. But when the older brother, who was the heir, proposed to the girl, she was unable to face the comparative poverty which would be the lot of the younger brother. The latter went off to Australia where he founded a fortune, and married a dwarf. An unattractive personality as he was in physique, Bob never returned to England. The older brother, however, never married the girl either for she discovered that after all she couldn't go through with the ceremony, loving the other brother, Nicholas Roxerby. Bob's son, was heir to his uncle's lot and fortune and upon his death went there to take over the ancestral home. He burned all his Australian bridges behind him. He married the daughter of a neighbor, who found that he was querulous and supersensitive so that they withdrew more and more from all social life around them.

When their second child was born, the first boy, he was a dwarf. It was a terrible blow to the father. Later the mother learned what she had not learned before, that her husband strain came from her husband's mother. The father's attitude toward his dwarf son was such that he wanted to give him away, give him to his grandmother. This the mother circumvented but she was not able to keep the boy in the home for some years and then only for the vacations. The boy was of a happy imaginative disposition, talented, a joy. Often the mother, Althea, thought how much less awful it was to have the dwarfed body of the boy, Hans, than the dwarfed mind of the father.

When Hans as a young man has remarkable success as an artist the father is won to him, and when a brutally frank critic writes of his physical condition, and Hans who had been scarcely conscious of his variance from other people is crushed. Here it is that the father helps the son, and from the depth of his poignant understanding.

"Mirrors of 1932." Anonymous, published by Brewer & Warren. "Mirrors of 1932" is an analysis of Republican and Democratic presidential material. Ten possibilities and John Barleycorn are considered. "John Barleycorn," says the author, "will be the boon companion of Presidential candidates in the 1932 campaign."

The personalities discussed are Herbert Hoover, Alfred Smith, Newton D. Baker, Gifford Pinchot, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Albert Ritchie, Senator Robinson and Owen D. Young.

The book is cleverly written. Some will find that it is much better written than "Washington Merry-Go-Round," some that the reverse is true. It depends somewhat on the order of reading the two books for the first one of such iconoclastic books which one reads is sure to be more interesting than the second which deals with much the same material. Parts of the "Mirrors of 1932" is so like certain sections of "Washington Merry-Go-Round" as to suggest that the same person may have written them. It may be the fact, however, that both books, or one of them was written by a group of writers.

Newton D. Baker is the only one to win the admiration of the author of "Mirrors of 1932." Of him the author says: "It is ironic that one of the best minds of the generation—culturally, legally, so—economically—should be housed so unimpressive a body."

Senator Robinson, it is stated in this book has been seduced by the president.

Of Governor Pinchot he says: "Mr. Pinchot is more attractive as a personality than as a politician. With all his shortcomings, it is to the credit of any man that he shows a definite preference for public service to the leisure which his millions can afford him."

"He is an excellent scholar, but he issues statements to the press which are almost as ungrammatical as Mr. Hoover's."

"High life has spoiled that grinning, good-natured child of the tenements and the sidewalks of New York—Al Smith . . . The barefoot boy of the Biltmore Hotel, an ironic rival once dubbed him, has gone high-hat, high-brow and high-life."

Book Notes . . .

The Book League of America announces that its September choice is "Albert Gelpi," by F. O. Matthiessen. The book is some 600 pages, written with leisurely charm, not to be read with leisurely charm. One of the readers remarked that it is part Horatio Alger and part William de Morgan, containing the best features of each.

Brand Whitlock has written a slender volume on the romance and life of Van Dyck. It is being brought out by D. Appleton company under the title, "Narcissus." It is based on an old Belgian legend of the famous notable personalities with whom Van Dyck and his teacher, Rubens, associated.

"M. H. in 'New Russia's Primer,' which was adopted by the Book-of-the-Month club, says: 'In America the machine cannot give a free man into a slave. This ought not to be permitted. Machines must be brought to society and not to individuals.'"

A new story on Africa has come out. Brewer and Warren announced that June Triplet, the demure heroine of "Salt Water Taffy," recently returned from an expedition to Africa. She told the story of her adventures there to her trip—one of the most amazing African expeditions ever conceived—will be published under the title of "Coconut Oil" August 24. It is said that every word of it is as true as the next.

Ink Blots Reveal Your Character

What does this cloud look like to you? . . . The weather man calls it "an arvil cloud." . . . Do you see something different in its peculiar shape?

Some of the elaborate blots used in personality tests by Dr. Hermann Rorschach . . . colored as indicated in the drawings . . . What you see in these would reveal your personality to a trained psychiatrist.

By JANE STAFFORD

DO you see pictures in clouds or in the embers of the campfire? You probably do, for this is a universal tendency of mankind.

Psychologists would like to know what you see in the clouds. How people interpret forms or shapes is of particular psychological interest because it tells so much about how the mind works.

When you look for pictures in clouds, do you consider the clouds as a whole or do you concentrate on the details? Clouds are so fleeting that they cannot be used for psychological testing. Embers are equally unsatisfactory for this purpose, since no two people can be sure they are seeing the same thing. But one psychologist, Dr. George V. Dearborn of the U. S. Veterans Hospital in The Bronx, New York, decided ink blots would be a good substitute.

At first, ink blot interpretations were considered useful for showing how the normal mind worked. Then a Swiss psychiatrist, Dr. Hermann Rorschach, thought of using them as an aid to the study of people whose minds were not normal. It appears now that the pictures you see in clouds or ink blots are a revelation of your personality.

How you interpret the form of the clouds or of the ink blot designs depends in part on your past experience. When you look at one of the ink blot designs you will see in it the picture of something you have seen before, or at least have heard described before.

If you are an imaginative person, that will show up in your interpretation of the ink blots. In fact, Dr. Rorschach claimed that from the ink blot test alone he could diagnose personality. He even proved this by making "blind" diagnoses which were checked against the findings of psycho-analysis.

Dr. Rorschach's diagnosis with nothing but the patient's name and response to the ink blots to guide him was the same as that of the psychiatrist who had made the careful psychoanalytical study.

The psychiatrist is always trying to find out more about personalities. The hardest diseases to treat are diseases of personality. The cause may be in the patient's environment or his past experience or his early training. It may be in the way he thinks of himself or the way he feels about other persons or things.

THE search for cause of personality diseases has led to the development of personality tests, among them interpretations of ink blot designs.

In these tests, unlike intelligence tests, there are no right or wrong answers. By giving the same test to many people the psychiatrist learns that certain types will respond in a certain way. You can amuse yourself by writing down what pictures you see in the ink blots taken from Dr. Dearborn's and Dr. Rorschach's sets.

Does your picture include the details or merely the general outline? Is the picture you see a stationary object or does it have motion in it? Time yourself to see how quickly you see a picture in a given design, and then compare it with the time made by someone else you know. Of course, it would take a trained psychiatrist to interpret your responses, but you may find an inkling of your tastes and habits in them.

The original suggestion for using ink blots as a new kind of psychological test was made by Dr. Dearborn when he was a young assistant in the philosophy department of Harvard University.

"To see things in the ever-changing outlines of summer clouds or among the flames and embers of a fire, has doubtless in all ages been to imaginative men a source of entertainment and delight," he observed in an early report to the American Journal of Psychology.

"Much of the charm of this pastime comes no doubt from the commonly accompanying circumstances of leisure, and from the novelty of exercising an aspect of mind all too little used and given freedom.

"Another element in the interest of the habit, however, comes from the endless variation in the forms which different persons fancy from any given contour or in any simple presented shape of the things they see.

Dr. George V. Dearborn . . . who invented ink blot tests because he wasn't able to harness clouds.

He tests your personality with 125 questions . . . Robert G. Bernreuter of the Stanford University Psychology Department.

Some of Dr. Dearborn's ink blots. . . No two people agreed on the top one . . . but the one next to the bottom might be a graceful dancer. . . What do you see?

Imaginary pictures you see in clouds, flames, smoke or any irregular shadows now give psychologists a clue to your personality

This fleecy cloud looks like a running bear . . . probably a polar bear . . . to some people . . . but perhaps you see something else in its outlines.

brain paths or currents representing objects.

There was great variety in interpretation of the blots. On one of the blots no two persons agreed. On another, four-fifths of the subjects saw the familiar figure of a man with upturned coat collar. These were the two extremes.

The same blot that was a "cabbage head" to one person was "an animal with his mouth open" to the next and a "fairy on a cloud" to a third. A professor was reminded by a blot of "half a sweet pea blossom" and his wife of a "snake coiled around a stick."

"It is clear that, as a general principle, the experience, and especially the early experience, of the subject has important influence," said Dr. Dearborn. "For example, study of the records shows that subject H., a purely domestic woman, is reminded most often of domestic objects; while subject O., who is an artist and student of mythology, sees in the blots many picturesque and fanciful things. The difference between the imaginations of the country and city bred is clear in the course of these tests."

THE Rorschach test goes much further than this, and besides depicting your imagination and memory, actually reveals your personality. It is said to be the only test which shows the emotional life of the individual. It gives a sample of what you are likely to do in a given situation. From your response to the Rorschach test, the psychiatrist can predict your behavior.

This test shows whether you are the matter-of-fact type that abhors fantasy and freely expressed emotions and keeps constant guard and control over yourself. If you are, you see good forms in the experiment, because you direct your whole life to form. But if this tendency progresses to its maximum, you may have a stunted, crippled mind and personality.

Dr. Rorschach said that when the subject picked out all the forms in the design carefully, with a distinct tendency to pedantic details, he was probably suffering from an obsessional neurosis or depression. If a great many of the designs are interpreted as a whole, the subject is dreamy and imaginative and given to drifting into fantasy states.

But if the responses show much more attention to the color and the form of the designs than to the action in it, and if in addition there are a large number of animal interpretations, the subject is probably an adaptable, smart, up-to-date but fairly stereotyped professional man.

ANOTHER way of testing personality is by asking questions designed to bring out your true feelings about people, things and situations. One such test has recently been designed by Robert G. Bernreuter of the psychology department of Stanford University. His test consists of 125 questions, of which the following are samples quoted at random:

Does it make you uncomfortable to be "different" or unconventional?

Do you day-dream frequently?

Do you usually work things out for yourself rather than get someone to show you?

Have you ever crossed the street to avoid meeting some person?

Can you stand criticism without feeling hurt?

Do you ever give money to beggars?

Do you often feel just miserable?

Several methods of scoring have been worked out to show various tendencies. By one method, the psychologist can tell from your answers whether you are well-balanced emotionally or whether you tend to be emotionally unstable.

Another score is a measure of self-sufficiency. Persons scoring high on this scale prefer to be alone, rarely ask for sympathy or encouragement and tend to ignore the advice of others. Those scoring low dislike solitude and often seek advice and encouragement.

her early life was obtained as regards familiarity with various animal forms, and concerning fairy stories, mythology and the like, and as regards possible habit of watching clouds and other natural forms as a pleasure of the imagination," Dr. Dearborn reported.

"It was expected that subjects raised on a farm, hunters and artists would have a store of advantage over those of contrary habits.

AMONG the subjects were two poets and two artists, and all of these were well toward the top in readiness and variety of response. One of these two poets made the shortest average of times and the subject who had the longest average is a young man very little fond of verse.

Dr. Dearborn noticed in some cases periods of inhibition when the subject could not see any resemblance in the blot to any object. This might last for a minute or two. It seemed to be like cases of inability to remember words. In the latter condition the brain paths or currents representing words are blocked, while in the inhibitions during the ink blot tests, the blocking seemed to be among the

FOR the purpose of studying the reproductive imaginations of people, the psychologist might desire to take the clouds into his control and bid them serve him; but they are far beyond him and will not for a moment stay.

The idea of ink blots then occurred to him. "Chance blots of ink, made by pressing gently with the finger a drop of common writing fluid between two squares of paper, furnished all the variety of outline imaginable," he reported.

Later the ink blots became more elaborate. Color was added, and in the Rorschach test the designs are no longer in silhouette, but are shaded, with details added inside the original design.

The subjects of Dr. Dearborn's first ink blot study were mostly students in the Harvard psychology laboratory, with some professors and their wives and one Latin-school girl. "In the case of every subject some brief sketch of his or

BEAN HOLDINGS IN STATE SHOW GAIN

Holdings of Beans in California warehouses on August 1 were the highest August holdings of any recent year, amounting to over 705,000 bags, or about 17% of the total supply available during the season. About 5% of the season's supply was on hand a year ago, and only 2 1/2% two years ago. Reduction in stocks during July amounted to about 134,000 bags, as compared with 82,000 bags during July, 1930 and 77,000 during July 1929, the federal state marketing service states.

Holdings of all important varieties on July 1 continued in heavier supply than a year ago, with the exception of cranberries, most of which have been moved. Red Kidney stocks have also been well reduced, only about 3,000 bags remaining in storage on August 1. Reduction in stocks during June amounted to about 31,000 bags of Limas, 23,000 bags of baby Limas, 23,000 bags of small whites, 25,000 bags of pinks and 20,000 bags of blackeyes. Cranberries, red kidneys and Limas continue in relatively lighter supply than other varieties, while stocks of pintos, large whites, bayos, California reds and blackeyes are relatively heavy as compared with the total.

Vegetable Pest Found Spreading

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—Add another to the dories of the truck grower.

The vegetable weevil, a new, hardy, strong flying insect which has a healthy appetite for a wide variety of common garden crops is spreading in the southern states and is known to occur in California, the United States department of agriculture reports.

This weevil is a small, grayish-brown beetle, about a third of an inch long. It was first found in Stone county, in Mississippi, in 1922. Since then it has spread to many counties in that state as well as to Louisiana, Alabama, and Florida, and in 1928 was discovered in the vicinity of San Jose, California.

Arsenical poisons will control the insect but in such crops as lettuce the use of poison involves an element of danger.

MILLIONAIRES SPURN BEDS FOR BARN LOFTS

Ho, Hum! This is real luxury, sighed J. Clark Coit, below, charter member and president of the Society of Hay Mow Sleepers, as he relaxed in a Pullman berth bedded with hay to test its sleep-producing qualities on a trip from Chicago to New York.

BEAN GROWERS INTERESTED IN NEW HOPI LIMA

BY W. M. CORY
Assistant Farm Advisor

Much interest has been displayed locally in the displacement of the Henderson bush lima with the Hopi lima bean. This has been true particularly in regions growing the baby lima and not so applicable to regions where the regular lima can be grown to advantage. Since at the present time there is a differential of approximately $2 per hundredweight in favor of the regular lima bean over the baby lima, growers can ill afford to grow baby limas on land which will produce 15 sacks or more to the acre of regular limas. On land producing less than 15 sacks, the possibility of receiving a sufficient greater yield of Hopis or varieties of the baby lima type to offset the differential in price, enters. The regular lima is consistently higher in price than the baby lima and on the average approximately the same ratio or greater exists.

Since the bulk of the bean acreage in Orange county is adapted to growing the regular lima, the acreage devoted to the baby lima type will necessarily be limited. However, certain growers may have spots here and there of inferior soil on which they might desire to try out the Hopi lima, or on land farther inland from the coast where difficulty in getting a set, owing to hot weather, had been experienced.

There are a number of selections of the Hopi lima, of which certain varieties are superior in yield and marketability. Of these, those two known as Number 30 and Number 56 are held in the highest regard by growers in the San Fernando valley. These two selections, together with others are being tested further with the idea of determining definitely which one to eventually adopt.

Society of Hay Sleepers Organized by Group of Business Men

CHICAGO, Aug. 22.—Listen, all you farm kids who have no place to sleep but in the hay mow. Quit feeling sorry for yourselves. Millionaires, the very ones, you have envied because they have mansions and beds and cool linen sheets, are so envious of you that they have banded together for the luxury of relaxing in fragrant hay mows.

Eight of them, in New York and Chicago, have formed the Society of Hay Mow Sleepers, the only purpose of which is to enable its members to satisfy their yearning to hit the hay. The unique organization is limited to business men who were brought up on a farm, those who have slept in hay mows, and those who never have but always longed to.

It all started recently when Mr. Coit was attending a party at the summer home of Mr. Walgreen near Dixon, Ill. There were more guests than beds, so Mr. Coit decided he wanted to sleep in the barn. A bed was prepared for him in the hay mow. He awoke the next morning, tremendously enthusiastic. The night in the hay had recalled most delightful memories of his boyhood days and he had slept like a child.

Final selection of one variety is highly essential to reduce the chances of mixing and to facilitate marketing.

Field observation would indicate planting in rows 36 inches apart and seeding at the rate of 25 to 30 pounds to the acre to be preferred to closer and heavier planting. The Hopi lima produces considerable straw and undue shading decreases the set.

There appears to be little question as to the desirability of the Hopi lima in preference to the Henderson bush lima as to yield. The greatest difference appearing on marginal land.

PICKING COSTS REDUCED FOR WALNUT MEN

BY HAROLD E. WAHLBERG
County Farm Advisor

A representative group of walnut growers and packing house managers for Los Angeles and Orange county met at El Monte recently to discuss and recommend a basis price for picking walnuts this season. The conference was called by the walnut department of the farm bureau.

The districts represented included Santa Ana, Garden Grove, Whittier, Rivera, Chino, Puente, San Fernando, El Monte and Mountain View. The reports from the various districts indicated that because of better picking conditions this year and higher purchasing power of the dollar, the industry would pay less per sack for picking labor. The range of prices extended from 40 cents to 60 cents per sack, depending on the set of crop. On the basis of 50 cents per sack for average picking, a family, consisting of man, wife and three children, can make from six to eight dollars per day.

A resolution was adopted at the meeting recommending that the packing houses notify their members that picking and economic conditions this year justify a base rate for picking walnuts of 50 per cent less than last year.

The state and federal employment offices reported to the meeting that wages were 20 to 30 per cent less than last year for all common labor.

TWO SOUTHLAND FAIRS IN MERGER

Following several weeks of negotiations, the Southern California fair, held for many years at Riverside has been permanently consolidated with the Los Angeles County fair at Pomona. The Southern California fair was conducted by the 46th agricultural district while the Los Angeles County fair is staged under the auspices of the sixth agricultural district.

Provisions of the agreement call for the transfer to Los Angeles County fair of the $25,000 state aid which formerly went to the Southern California fair. The sum of $12,500 of this amount will be received this year and a similar amount will come next year.

Carry Over Of Wheat Increases

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—A carry over of 319,059,000 bushels of domestic wheat in the United States on July 1 is reported in a preliminary estimate issued today by the bureau of agricultural economics of the U. S. department of agriculture. This compares with 290,530,000 the estimated carry over of a year ago, and is an increase of 28,529,000 bushels or 9.8 per cent.

These estimates include stocks of wheat stored by mills for other owners which have not been included in estimates previous to 1930, hence, they are not exactly comparable with estimates prior to 1930. A comparison of the estimates of the last two years show that stocks of old-crop wheat on farms and in interior mills and elevators and in merchant mills are smaller than a year previous, and that commercial stocks of domestic wheat are larger by nearly 100,000,000 bushels.

NEED OF PEST CONTROL CITED IN RADIO TALK

(Editor's note: Following is an address given over radio station KREG August 17:)

By D. W. TUBBS

Deputy Agricultural Commissioner
Due to a slight abnormality in the weather conditions during the past two months and to certain conditions in the field at the present time, it seems advisable to seriously consider the possibilities for controlling citrus pests by the usual approved methods.

Treatment Delayed

At the time of the appearance of the new brood of black scale during the month of June, it seemed to many growers that the infestation of this pest in their orchard was very light and that they did not, therefore, need to treat for this pest at that time. The plan in a good many cases was to await the time of the next brood, which would be during the winter months in the two-brood area, and thus to defer treatment until such time as better results could be obtained against the red scale.

Three other factors apparently contributed to the inactivity against citrus pests during the month of July and the early part of August. These were, first, the temperature range was so high both during the day time and night that neither spraying nor fumigation seemed possible without considerable damage being done to the fruit or foliage. Second, as this was a large crop year, very few growers had picked sufficient fruit to permit scale treatment. Third, the prospects of a decreased return undoubtedly inspired many growers to feel that it would be necessary to cut down on the expense of pest control. These factors have caused certain conditions to arise in an average grove which might be described as follows:

Severe Infestation

The population of black scale in this grove, while light, is sufficiently great in number to cause a severe infestation after the winter brood appears. The existence of a certain amount of purple scale requires some treatment at this time. To wait until winter time means to allow the black scale infestation to build up and perhaps to miss entirely a large amount of the purple scale. Thus the winter fumigation alone, which is intended to control the black and red scale, might still permit damage from the black scale in the interim and from purple scale before the next summer, which would be the first opportunity to use control measures on this pest.

With the exception of the eastern portion of the citrus area of our county and certain infestations of single brood scale, the black scale is now generally so far advanced that any known treatment at this time will leave many live scales. This condition has been true for the past three or four weeks, coming several weeks earlier this year than usual. In a similar manner the warm weather has apparently increased the activity of purple scale; a very active hatch is taking place at the present time. In some groves this scale is already in optimum condition for treatment, whereas in the average year the period of larger percentage of the young occurs during the month of September.

Invulnerable Stage

As already indicated, a large portion of the black scale has now reached a stage invulnerable to any known treatment, and no treatment should be given at this time with the hope of controlling more than a small percentage of this scale, with the exception as previously stated, of a few groves in the eastern section and the groves in the district where black scale has only one generation per year. Groves having a trace, or very light infestation of double brood black scale at this time may be fumigated during the early winter season with reasonable assurance of control. If the infestation should be heavy, however, it is very probable that an additional treatment immediately will save considerable loss during the winter.

Light to light medium infestations of purple scale can be controlled best by fumigation or spray within the next few days. Medium to heavy infestations, however, will be controlled only by using the combination treatment. (This is a term we use for spray followed within a short interval by fumigation.) The usual practice calls for a spray with the equivalent of a two percent medium oil emulsion, followed within 10 days or two weeks by fumigation at the highest dosage permissible without injury to the tree.

Fumigation Best

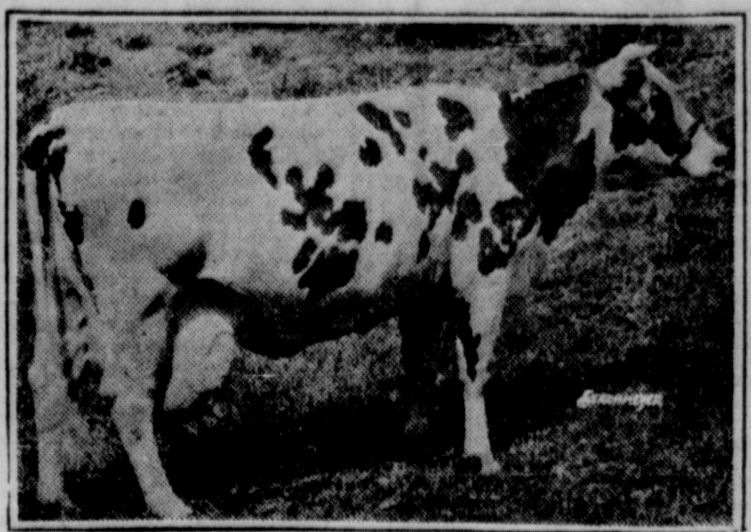

The best single treatment for purple scale where it occurs as a light infestation and when properly timed, has been fumigation. However, if timed when a large percentage of the scale are in the mature and egg stage, results from this treatment may not be satisfactory.

In general, summer spraying with light or medium oils and winter fumigation, even with high dosages, have given poor results in controlling the medium to heavier infestations of purple scale.

Red scale is rapidly becoming of major importance throughout the county. In many of the orange groves where a few years ago this

GIVES 16,000 QUARTS IN YEAR

May De Kol Francy, a mature Holstein in the herd of E. Parmelee Prentice of Williamstown, Mass., has produced 34,448 pounds (16,000 quarts) of milk containing 1120 pounds of butterfat in 365 days, according to the Holstein-Friesian Association of America. She is the 160th Holstein and the 201st cow on the national list of any breed to exceed 1000 pounds of butterfat in one year and ranks 16th for fat among her breed sisters.

15 OFFICES TO HANDLE CALAVO CROP PLANNED

Fifteen branch offices will soon be operating throughout the United States to handle the "bumper" calavo and avocado crop now setting on the trees in Southern California. It is announced by Edwin Humason, sales manager of the Calavo Growers of California, the growers' co-operative unit.

Over twice as many representatives as covered the markets last year will work out of these offices, mostly in the eastern division, which covers the districts east of the Rockies. They will contact dealers, distributors, retailers, chain organizations, hotels, clubs and other consumers.

Two important special assignments are being made, one, a continental trained chef who will call on hotels, restaurants and clubs, and the other, a "chain store" representative, who will contact the chain organizations on a volume basis throughout the country.

scale did not seem to be of major importance, it has now become generally noticeable and in some places is doing considerable damage. The lighter infestations in orchards in the area in which red scale has not been extensive are best controlled by winter fumigation. However, where this pest has existed for several seasons and in increasing numbers, the best control has been shown to be the so-called combination treatment as described for purple scale. Fall spray followed in the winter by a fumigation with high dosage has also given good results. In the case of lemons a heavier oil and heavier dosage of hydrogen cyanide can be used. This treatment should be given within the next month in the case of oranges, and possibly the next 60 days on lemons.

FEE PRINCIPLE GETS BACKING OF BLACKBURN

Supporting officials of the American Farm Bureau federation in their demand that the benefits of the Federal Marketing act be increased by the adoption of the equalization fee principle. R. W. Blackburn, president of the California Farm Bureau federation, stated today that the organized farmers of California would approve of this adjustment.

"If the Marketing act and the program of the farm board can be strengthened by the advantages of the equalization fee, every progressive farmer is for it," stated Blackburn. "The tremendous problem of stabilizing national farm commodity prices, and of handling national crop surpluses, must be solved. The farm bureau has always favored the principle of the fee, although for the past two years we have not urged its use."

"In California several of our largest cooperatives are already operating on the equalization principle and it appears to be a sound method of placing the burden of surplus production upon the entire commodity, rather than upon individual producers."

The American Farm Bureau federation announced its return to active support of the fee in a public address of its national president, Edward A. O'Neal, to representatives of 11 mid-western states, meeting together on farm problems at Madison, Wis.

TO SAVE SUBS

WASHINGTON—Frank G. Preston, of Tacoma, Wash., has patented a device to salvage submarines. The invention includes buoys, releasable by hand or automatically, to be carried by submarines and designed to mark the location of the vessel if disabled under water. These buoys are further designed to serve as pilot cables for grappling devices in raising the submarine.

U. S. DEVELOPS NEW POULTRY DISEASE TEST

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—A new and simplified test for pullorum disease of poultry promises to make possible within a minute or two the decision as to whether a fowl is infected. U. S. department of agriculture officials said today, in announcing that a public service patent covering an essential step in the test has been assigned to the secretary of agriculture, who will administer it for the benefit of the public.

Using the new method an experienced tester may catch a chicken, make a pin prick, get a small drop of blood, mix it with a drop of diagnostic agent on a pane of glass and complete the test within a minute. Heretofore the diagnosis of pullorum disease has involved the taking of larger samples of blood and careful handling to prevent spoilage until they could be tested in a laboratory. It has been necessary also to number the birds and to keep records which would identify the blood samples.

Material for making more than 100,000 tests has been distributed to investigators and field workers throughout the United States as a means of checking the reliability of the test under a wide range of field conditions.

Raisin Growers Given U. S. Loan

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 22. The federal farm board has agreed to advance funds to the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California for operating purposes for the year 1931-32 which the co-operative and the board feel will permit of successful conduct of the co-operative's business.

The board has also agreed to participate in financing the California raisin pool upon the basis of the 1930 advances which, it is estimated, will mean an average advance to the growers of approximately 2 1/2 cents per pound. It is expected that the California grape control board will continue its operations during the coming season, including the collection of stabilization fees.

THE WORLD AT ITS WORST—MEETING THE FAMILY By GLUYAS WILLIAMS

THE TINYMITES

STORY BY MAE COCHRAN — PICTURES BY KNICK
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

The carnival parade was quite a startling thing. My, what a sight. All sorts of floats were taking part and people lined the streets. Some floats were packed with girls galloping, whose waving made the watchers roar. And others contained acrobats who did some startling feats.

Said Scouty, as they rode along, "This float is just where we belong. There's room for every one of us. I'll bet we get a cheer." And, sure enough, from place to place, each time a Tiny'd show his face, the crowd sent up a greeting. Clowny said, "I'm glad we're here."

"I feel as proud as I can because the folks are cheering me. This being in the parade ourselves instead of watching it is quite a new idea, for we never have tried it before. I thought at first that I'd be scared, but I am not one bit!"

An hour passed by and then the parade was over. Then the Tinimade a dash for an ice cream place, 'cause the ride had made them hot. They found what was a clever stunt, where tables were set out in front. "Bring on the ice cream," Clowny cried. "I know I'll eat a lot."

Toward night they took a big machine and rode away. Each one was keen to know where they were bound for. "Santiago is the spot," explained the kindly Travel Man. "We'll get there quickly as we can. That city's down in Chili, as you all know, like as not."

At last the long train ride was over and they were on their way once more to look around and see the sights. Along the way they played. And then the Travel Man yelled, "Stop! Now follow me into this shop. It is a very strange place where real lovely hats are made."

Missing Letter Links

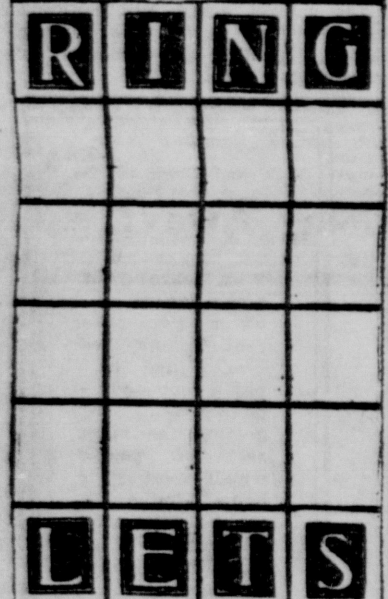

RULES

1. In playing golf on the Missing Letter Links the object is to change one word to another in a given number of strokes which is par. For example, to go from TEE to PIN in three strokes sounds hard but isn't: TEE-TIE-FIN. It's probably more difficult on a real course.

2. Change but one letter at a time and be sure the word you have used is one in good usage.

3. The order of the letters cannot be changed.

MORE ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Miss Florence Peterson, acting director of unemployment research under the industrial commission of the state of Wisconsin, has written an article for the United States Daily on problems confronting cities because of unemployment. A portion is worth careful consideration:

"Whether or not it is the responsibility of government to assume the support of its unemployed is no longer a question of theoretical opinion; it is an established fact. No less than $2,000,000 was spent in Wisconsin out of tax funds during 1930 for direct unemployment relief due to the depression.

"If business conditions continue as they were in 1930, at least $5,000,000 will be spent out of tax funds in 1931.

"This does not include the usual amount of money spent by our cities and counties each year for outdoor poor relief. Neither does it include the collateral burden in the form of increased costs in public institutions, particularly hospitals and infirmaries, homes for children and the aged, poor farms, etc. For instance, such additional burdens cost Milwaukee County at least $175,000 in 1930.

"The drain upon public resources progressively increases even though the amount of unemployment gets no worse because more and more of the unemployed gradually use up their savings and exhaust their credit and apply to public agencies for support. Also, private agencies, finding it increasingly difficult to collect funds when business continues poor, are unable to carry on their usual share of the burden which then must be taken over by the public agencies.

"Green Bay and Racine spent more during the first four months of 1931 than they did during the entire year of 1930; Milwaukee and Rock Counties spent practically as much. All of the cities are spending more each month than they did during corresponding months in 1930. Many of the extra large community chest funds collected last fall were exhausted within five or six months and the campaigns for such funds conducted this Spring have not been very successful.

"Although it is impossible for the government to escape the responsibility of caring for its unemployed, the question might reasonably be raised: Which group of taxpayers should bear the burden? At present almost the entire expenditure comes from general property taxes. This is necessarily true so long as the county and city governments assume the entire burden of caring for their unemployed. Of the State's share of all taxes from all sources 9 per cent is levied on general property; of the counties' share 21 per cent is levied on general property; of the towns, villages and cities' share 85 per cent is levied on general property (based on Wisconsin's 1929 tax report). To tap any other kind of taxes than general property taxes would mean State or Federal Government aid.

"Where did the money come from which has been spent for unemployment relief? One city says: 'By drastic curtailment of capital expenditures, new machinery and equipment. Also, we had a small surplus.' Milwaukee, in order to prevent a material increase in the 1931 tax levy, used one-half of the fund annually levied for the purpose of gradually placing the city on a cash basis. They also realized some money from a football game and other sources. A number of cities had surpluses which are now exhausted. Many cities curtailed regular departmental budgets so that schools, playgrounds and other semi-luxury activities suffered. All without exception the cities and counties report that, should unemployment relief needs continue to be as great next Winter, they would have to raise taxes or borrow.

"Methods of administration and disbursement of unemployment relief in the various cities and counties of Wisconsin vary from the best established practices of modern times to methods used in Medieval Ages. Some cities and counties employ an adequate staff of trained family case workers who make a very careful and sympathetic investigation of each family's needs and then see that the family is taken care of with the least amount of humiliation and delay.

"Other communities have been so reluctant to increase their administrative staff commensurate with the increased amount of work to be done, that investigation is insufficient and sometimes entirely omitted. As a consequence some families are overlooked and others less needy are given more than is necessary."

Dorothy thinks that the chicken reel is some new film on poultry life.

GANGSTERS DESPERATE

For a payroll of less than $5000 a running battle was fought in New York City yesterday, resulting in the death of two police officers, three gangsters and one child. Eleven others were wounded, several of them officers and the rest bystanders.

The desperate attitude of the men can be well determined by the fact that an officer was accompanying the man with the payroll when the two gangsters opened fire upon them and grabbed the money.

While it is an awful penalty to pay for the taking of $5000, from the standpoint of the rest of the folk it was undoubtedly worth it. It will serve notice upon the bandit fraternity that their way is hard and it will undoubtedly cause the city to the need of cleaning up the streets.

MAYOR WALKER ABROAD

Mayor James W. Walker of New York City declared in raising an American flag over a brewery in Pilsen, Czechoslovakia, that he had no dearer wish for his native city than to see Pilsener signs reappear as evidence of conviviality and entertainment.

With hundreds of thousands of men out of work in New York, with gangsters shooting up the city for a few hundred dollars of payroll money, with Tammany completing the looting which gangsters are unable to handle, the dearest wish for its mayor is that Bohemian beer shall be pulled from the spigot in the "wet" joints of the city.

If we had five guesses as to what the chief desires of the mayor of New York under all the circumstances would have been, we would have guessed at least four of them would be for beer.

The mayor is supposed to be the chief citizen, the leader, and Jimmy is the mayor. And with his dandy clothing, his cane and plug hat, we can see him leading the people of the American metropolis straight up to the doorway of a brewery. And in the parade we see all that contributes to making his leadership notorious.

It might help New York a little bit if there were a law providing that the people who made their money in the city should live within its municipal limits. Hundreds of trains carry some of the best elements of New York City out into the suburbs of New York and New Jersey, leaving New York itself to Jimmy and his clan.

GENERAL BUTLER TO RETIRE

The dispatches declare that the President is willing to have Major General Smedley Butler retire from the Marine Corps. Yes, we should imagine he would be. And the more completely he could get the General to retire, the better the President would like it. He says that General Butler is a very gallant officer. He is. He always can see the graphic and the news item in any undertaking and he is able to bring it forth and put it on the front page to bother a lot of folk.

General Butler will not want for entertainment. It may be that he could get some enjoyable experience out of lecturing on Mussolini.

TOURIST TRAVEL GOOD

The gas tax for July was seven per cent less in this state than for July of a year ago. This is not a very serious reduction, though in the aggregate it amounts to a large amount of money.

If the tourist travel is within seven per cent of normal we have not far to go to reach very fine conditions. In fact, the past few years have been above normal. Maybe we are more rapidly approaching normalcy than we think. The prices quoted in June undoubtedly affected the travel in July.

Inviting Him Back

Oakland Tribune

California has named the quail the state bird. New York is bemoaning the fact that the Bob White quail, once so numerous, is almost extinct and is taking means to remedy the situation. The state conservation department there has ordered from a breeder in Virginia 3400 quail to be distributed for propagation in various parts of New York. It is explained that the greatest enemy to the quail in the Empire State is not the hard winter but the rapacity of the pot hunter.

Virginia, the state which is furnishing New York with quail, had a similar experience. Its game commission lent its support to systematic attempts to arrest the decline of the birds and one man, William B. Coleman, conducted a successful attempt in breeding the bird in captivity. Within ten years he released approximately 20,000 birds.

So anxious is New York to get the quail back, farmers and sportsmen have promised to co-operate with the conservation department. Grain is to be left in the fields for the birds to feed upon and supplementary food supplies are to be provided when the winters are severe. New York did not realize how much it valued the Bob White until he departed.

Temptation to Quit School

Burbank Daily Review

"Should I continue my education or should I quit school and go to work?"

That is a question which thousands of young people are asking themselves. And without the slightest inclination toward indulging in scholastic sentiment or pedagogical poppycock, we make bold to provide the answer: "Keep on going to school so long as you show signs of making intellectual progress."

It is true that many a successful man has made good without prolonged schooling. It is true that many a pupil gets little or nothing out of school work and might better seek a job. But it is also true that many another student is lured away from his books by economic temptations when he would gain more in the end by acquiring further education.

This is a day of specialization. The man or woman whose technical equipment and mental training are of the best is the man or woman who forges ahead. Our schools and colleges are prepared to supply that equipment and training to serious minded youths. No young person who is capable of benefiting by their intellectual offerings should choose the alluring road to immediate financial gain.

Work for Prosperity But Do Not Forget Intelligence

San Bernardino Sun

Henry Ford said lately that there is only one way to prosperity—hard work. This is still true as a general principle. An individual in a particular job, or a community or nation in a particular situation, usually gets ahead by working hard rather than by loafing. But it is far less true than it used to be. Ford's own prosperity comes from more thinking than working. It is the same with any group, and with society in general. Intelligence is worth more than muscular labor or routine mental application.

Machinery does more and more of our work. It takes intelligence to make and use machines, and to manage those who run them. The world just now is shy on intelligence.

More Truth Than Poetry

FLYING LESSONS

About the time when falls the dew
To head the orchard trees,
We hear a plaintive chirp or two
Across the evening breeze,
And if we haply are endued
With an observing eye,
We'll find the robin's little brood
Is learning how to fly.

For daring feats they have no zest;
They lack all love for flight;
They'd rather, far, stay in their nest
Where life seems quite all right.
But out they're tumbled, one by one,
Despite their wild dismay,
And they must fly from sun to sun
Though skies be blue or gray.

Though cats and hawks may lie in wait
To catch them as they pass,
Though owls are hid behind the gate
And squirrels in the grass,
And perils compass them about,
They still must wake at dawn
And flutter lamely in and out
Until the stars are gone.

And yet, as year still follows year,
On firm and steady wing
More robin's babies reappear
With every coming spring.
So why should little children groan
And fret and whine and scold?
They are not sent out on their own
When they are three weeks old!

RAY OF HOPE

Soon the gangsters and racketeers will have all the money in the country, and then they'll have to prey on each other.

A Mental Depression

By WILLIAM TRUFANT FOSTER
and WADDILL CATCHINGS

Every day this week we have been discussing the alleged major causes of this depression. Some of these causes we have found to be mere fantasies. They are wholly without a basis of fact.

For example, there is no evidence of any extraordinary increase in production in the years just preceding the beginning of this depression. There was no "overproduction," in this sense of the word, either in the United States, or in the world as a whole. Nor were there maladjustments which cannot be matched by those of our most prosperous times. As far as the statistics go, therefore, it would be as logical to conclude that GOOD times are caused by "unbalanced production" as to conclude that bad times are so caused.

Equally groundless appears to be the contention that the depression in the United States was caused by external influences. In the first place, our "favorable balance of trade" has never been large enough to account for one tenth of the prevailing slump. In the second place, the slump started in the United States, and was caused immediately by the crash in the New York Stock Market, for which we can hardly blame the rest of the world.

As a matter of fact, we have in the United States, without aid from any other country, all the requisites of sustained prosperity. At this moment, every material requirement is in our possession. We have the men, the materials and the machines. We have, also, the eager desire of 120,000,000 people to consume more than they are now consuming. We have, as well, a monetary system and a gold supply which can be so administered as to sustain prosperity.

The chief trouble is that we live and move and have our industrial being in a monetary economy. WITHOUT the right flow of money, there is no way in which the idle men can take the surplus materials, and machines and create the wealth which is eagerly desired. WITH the right flow of money to consumers, the whole industrial world would spring into new life.

WE HAVE THE MONEY. We lack the courage to use the money in the right way. To that extent, the present depression is purely mental.

Thoughts On Modern Life

By GLENN FRANK

AS OUR SONS LEAVE FOR COLLEGE

The thronging of students into American colleges and universities in this particular autumn of 1931 will have a meaning alike to the students and to the nation, quite beyond the meaning that ordinarily attaches to the opening of the school year.

I hope the peculiar significance of the period through which the nation and the world are now passing will filter into the minds of our sons and daughters and inspire in them a new devotion to those rigorous disciplines of mind and character which alone can produce men and women equipped to rescue our generation from the political, social and economic confusion into which it has fallen in these days of world-wide depression.

The students entering college this year will have to live, their lives and practice their professions in a world disturbed by something deeper than the after-effects of a market crash, in a world that has become so complex that it has overtaxed the managerial skill of existing leadership.

And these students, like their predecessors, will fail their generation unless from their college training they bring to the affairs of their time two things.

- (1) Sanely disciplined minds.
- (2) Soundly developed characters.

I hope that in the selection of their courses and in the persistent question they put to their professors, the students of 1931-32 will demand that the colleges and universities give them a genuine insight into the problems that now haunt the American social order.

I hope that, in their social life outside the class room, the students of 1931-32 will consciously practice that self-control and sub-ject themselves to that self-discipline which alone can produce the strength that the strains of the future will demand.

The colleges and universities must do everything possible to help their students in this enterprise of self-development.

They must perfect the program and personnel of an adequate system of guidance, supervision and counsel alike in matters of mind and of character.

And this service of guidance, supervision and counsel, in those deeper and more personal matters that make or mar the character of students, must be conducted without annoying and self-defeating paternalism.

Colleges and universities must give students an opportunity to live up to their leaders' expectations of them than down to their leaders' suspicions of them.

OUR CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRI
THE PICNIC

This is picnic time and for the children there is not a happier time. To go out of the house and away to the open country and eat under the shade of a tree, maybe close to a brook, is the height of delight to a child.

There was a five acre lot within five minutes walk of a little girl's house. A big butternut shaded one corner where a big gray rock, lichen and mossed and trimmed with ferns rested. Along the foot of the meadow a slow stream cooed its way among the bracken and sweet fern. To be allowed to carry her lunch in a little basket and eat it under the butternut tree was her idea of heaven. And if she could smuggle a book into the basket and read it as she sat high in the old tree, heaven took on that special glory that is its lure and light for old and young.

Simple things please children. Not only do they please the children but they feed them with the sort of food that adds cubits to their stature. You may think that a child is not doing very much when she sits in the boughs of an old butternut tree reading a book but I can tell you that there is a magic going on inside that in-roads of strength—that inner strength which endures and triumphs over material things.

Perhaps you think it foolish for a boy to lie on his back in a field of daisies and watch the clouds by the hour. Maybe it looks like a waste of time for children to sit breathlessly watching a pair of orioles in the orchard. I can tell you that it is a sound use of the hours of childhood. It bears interest for a lifetime, the sort of interest that grows more golden with the years.

The boy who can cook his own lunch on the camp fire, who can pack his kit and walk to the camping place, catch his fish, cook it and eat it, has within him the germ that will become power and endurance when he needs them most. He will be able to look over the annoyances and inconveniences that make the untrained boy their prey. He will laugh at difficulties that check the helpless boy brought up without the experiences of camping and picnicking.

Any meal eaten in the open is a picnic, of course, but the best kind of picnic is the one that calls for an all-day jaunt into strange and untried places. They may be near, they may be far away, but if they are new, they are pure adventure for the children.

This is not as much bother as you imagine. If you will provide the outfit you can soon train the children to pack the lunch and serve it. They learn to do camp-cooking easily. You would have to provide the meal anyway, and this sort of one is easier than the home-served one.

If you can't get away for a long trip use what you have, the maple tree in the yard, the five acre lot, the porch, but picnic with the children before this summer has gone.

ON THE SIDELINES

Which may or may not be in accord with the views of The Register

By Horace McPhee

THE RICH AS CHARITY GIVERS—Figures cited in an article published in the May number of the "American Mercury" entitled "Do the Rich Give to Charity?" makes the reader stop to contemplate the solution of the present problem of greater charity needs.

In Manhattan, according to this article, 357,825 persons filed income tax returns in 1928. Yet only 55,000 persons in Manhattan and the Bronx or about one out of seven of those who filed income tax returns, subscribed to the city's three leading charities.

The article goes on to show very conclusively that the burden of social ills falls on a few very generous rich, and on the bulk of poor wage earners, who do not make enough money to file income tax returns, but are responding more and more generously to the greater need for giving and helping the poor and suffering.

This condition of affairs makes one wonder if, where private charities are unable to cope with the increasing need for help, as is prophesied in the article, the government will not have to take matters into its hands, and even things up a little. Compulsory charity for the rich man whose income escapes entirely from the increased demands for social aid may have to be resorted to. Certainly he can stand more of an added strain on his income than the average man whose income is even now taxed to the limit, but who has never refused the cry for help from the man who is down and out.

WORD IS ALL RIGHT SO AND SO and so and so are "vacationing" so we are told many times and oft by the newspapers.

It's a right sprightly word, to, is "vacationing" even though the dictionary makers seem never to have heard of it.

The man who is upon a vacation is "vacationing" just as the man who is wearing trousers is "trouserking."

OF COURSE the modern woman is able to do anything which she thinks needs doing, but, some way or another, we regard as doubtful the ability of Miss Beatrice Jaffrey, of New York, to carry out the somewhat ambitious program set for her by a New York newspaper. A society item of the paper in question says of "Last night she sailed for a four months' stay in Germany, and while there she will visit France and England."
